Better Homes Drive Proposed For Montclair

Montclair — Promotion of this city as a "high class residential area" consequently kept many local businesses from leaving homes in Upland, the foothills and other areas, was suggested Monday night by Councilman Ernest Rowley as he and other council members discussed a new annexation policy for the city.

Rowley pointed out that Montclair has substantial residential areas, but lacks medium- and high-priced homes. He said that the city's current policy of accepting annexations is inadequate and that the city should set standards for quality of housing and commercial development.

Other council members agreed that the city's reputation as a residential area is one of its strengths. They suggested that the city should focus on improving its infrastructure and public services to attract more residents.
