By JOHN MORTHAUD... Vivian H. Coughlin can operate a two-acre tract...

That was the decision yesterday by the County Planning Commission after 30 minutes of sometimes heated debate.

Protesters included an attorney representing three businessmen in the area, a man who says he has a business in the area, and a middle-aged woman who says she and someone planning to move into the neighborhood.

In addition, Commission F. Youder said he was a member, J. H. Paterson, of "trying to turn down everything."

It all started when Will and David Gilgley, who will build a house on the site, said they had the variance so that they could place the facility in a center-city light manufacturing zone.

Mand noted the prospect of building a shopping center directly across from the property located on the south side of Base Line and Collins.

Then Charles F. Lyndon said it was finally brought to the near the proposed site very soon, and that many people were afraid there would be disturbed by the dust the machines would create.

Says U.S. Attorney Crime in County Level for State

"San Bernardino County is really no worse crime-wise than any other California county at least not by reputation," Manuel C. Reas, U.S. Attorney for the Southern District of California, said yesterday.

Reas said that the attitude of juvenile delinquency in the county is about the same as in other counties and that boys and girls are worried about the future. The young people are not in any danger of anything because they fear the law.
